Explore churches in the heart of Hessen

Living in Germany provides an abundance of opportunities for sightseeing, but who would have thought that amidst the local culture one could find two ornate Russian cathedrals, all within the state of Hessen.

One of these churches is located near Wiesbaden Army Airfield and another in Darmstadt, a short distance from the airfield.

Perched on a hill at the base of the Taunus Mountains and surrounded by a lush forest with Wiesbaden nestled below is a Russian Orthodox Church. Commissioned by Czars Nicholas I and Alexander I, the church was built for Elizabeth Michailovna, a niece of the czars, Duchess of Nassau (Germany) and Grand Duchess of Russia. Elizabeth and her family resided in Castle Biebrich that sits along the Rhein River in Wiesbaden. This castle can still be visited today. The duchess died while giving birth to a stillborn baby, which was a tremendous loss to Russia as well as to the local Wiesbaden residents.

It took seven years to build the church, which was completed in 1855. Nassau architect Phillip Hoffman built the church with inspiration from the Grand Cathedral of Christ the Saviour in Moscow. It is made of imported sandstone and handsomely carved in Byzantine, Romantic and Russian architectural styles.

Five golden cupolas rise to the heavens topped with gold plated Russian crosses. There are splendid carvings and frescoes adorning the outside and interior of the church. The church is very intimate with a beautiful altar, nave and an expressively painted dome. The interior is made of variations of imported marble from Greece, Sweden, Italy, Egypt and Germany, with a magnificent sarcophagus of the duchess carved in Carrara marble leading to her crypt. Here the duchess is laid to rest with her baby.

Darmstadt domes

Czar Nicholas II of Russia married Alexandria Feodorovna who was from Darmstadt. When they visited her family in Darmstadt, Alexandria missed having a Russian Orthodox Church, which she had grown to love in Moscow. The czar granted Alexandria's wish and commissioned a church to be built on high ground in Darmstadt so that the golden cupolas would reach the heavens and the church would bless the town's people.

Saint Mary Magdelane Russian Cathedral was completed in 1899 by Russian architect Benois and is richly decorated with mosaics, gold plate, multi-colored tiles and Byzantine design. It has become a cultural treasure to the city and created a bridge for intercontinental ties with Eastern Europe. The inside of the church is smaller than the Wiesbaden cathedral, but is well worth the 80 euro cents price of admission. A fresco is located above the altar with pictures of the Czar Nicolas II and Princess Alexandria.

If you plan on visiting either of these cathedrals be sure to bring a few extra euros to purchase gold embossed post cards, books, pictures or Russian religious souvenirs.

To get to the Russian church in Wiesbaden, follow B-455 toward the Stadtmitte. Go through the tunnel on Frankfurter Strasse past the American Arms Hotel and turn left on Rhein Strasse. Take a right at the next intersection on Wilhelm Strasse then turn left on Taunus Strasse, which becomes Neroberg Strasse. Follow the road to the end and take a sharp right uphill onto Weinberg Strasse. The church is on Neroberg Strasse at Weinberg Strasse.

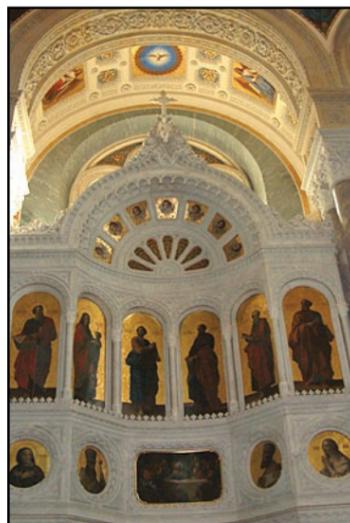

To get to the church in Darmstadt from A-5 or A-67, take the Darmstadt/Griesheim 672 exit

123rd MSB soldiers help Iraqi school

By 1st Lt. H. L. Taylor-Hartle
123rd Main Support Battalion

Soldiers of the 123rd Main Support Battalion, based in Dexheim, not only work hard to keep the 1st Armored Division operating smoothly while deployed to Iraq, but have taken the time and extra effort to directly impact the lives of local Iraqi citizens.

After hearing a request for assistance from the Civil Affairs Detachment, Lt. Col. Clark LeMasters, 123rd MSB commander, jumped at the opportunity to help rebuild a local school just 15 miles south of Baghdad along the Euphrates River in the Jurfas Sakhr neighborhood. During the following weeks over 50 of the unit's soldiers volunteered to do whatever they could to make the small, rural schoolhouse a little nicer and a lot more fun. The school provides education for approximately 350 students ranging in age from seven to 14.

"What shocked me was the size of the classrooms," said Command Sgt. Maj. Troy Barton. "The children had to climb over the desks to get to their seats," he said. The school had no water source, no playground equipment and minimal school supplies; however, with the help of artists, carpenters and even family members in the battalion, all of that has changed.

Volunteers within the battalion helped build swing sets, a water tank, a playhouse, picnic tables and more. Additionally family members back in Germany and the United States collected donations of pens, pencils, paper and other school supplies.

Not only was this a chance to help out people who are less fortunate, it also provided an opportunity for cultural exchange. "Helping with the school project made me realize that the Iraqi people are no different from us, just less fortunate. They were very thankful for our help and truly welcomed us," said Sgt. 1st Class Jamie Gilmore, of Company E.

After a day of working in the hot sun the "Mighty Main" soldiers head home feeling tired and in need of a shower, but overall satisfied for having shared a little of what many of us take for granted. The soldiers will return to the school toward the end of September to hand out school supplies collected by the unit as the Iraqi children head back for their first day of school.

Anaconda pool lets soldiers chill out

Public Affairs Office

The soldiers in Iraq have been living in a heat many have never experienced before. The temperature in recent weeks has regularly exceeded 130 degrees, leaving the soldiers with few options to beat the heat.

Fortunately for the soldiers stationed at Logistical Support Area Anaconda a pool has been opened to help them get a break from the scorching Iraqi sun and relax in their free time.

After months of waiting the pool was opened to the soldiers following a brief ceremony Aug. 18. Brig. Gen. Vincent E. Boles, commander of 3rd Corps Support Command, cut the ribbon to open the pool for his soldiers.

"It's a big morale booster," said Staff Sgt. Wendy Ralston, 288th Quartermaster Supply Company noncommissioned officer in charge of the pool. It's something different for the troops to do and it gets them out of the heat, she said.

"You get the opportunity to relax and get away from the company," said Spc. Jonathan Yulee, 264th Engineer Company.

The pool at LSA Anaconda sat dry for 10 years before the American Army's occupation of the former Iraqi Aviation Academy, and it required considerable work to make it functional, said Ralston. To clean out the pipes, the soldiers of the 288th, a water purification unit, had to fill and drain it five times.

Ralston helped with the rebuilding of the facility and was eventually tasked to run the pool. She has seven soldiers helping her at the pool including two certified lifeguards who keep an eye on the swimmers in case of accidents. The number of swimmers was relatively low for the first few days because many soldiers didn't know the pool had opened, she said.

"I felt bad because we had soldiers coming and asking us if we were open, and we had to send them away, but it felt good to have the general cut the ribbon and let the people in," said Ralston. As soon as the word spreads, Ralston expected lines to begin forming.

The maximum capacity of the pool is 125 people. When large numbers of soldiers start to frequent the pool a swimming limit of one hour will be imposed to give everyone a chance to take a dip.

Waiting to get wet

The anticipation of the pool opening has had many soldiers keeping an eye on the facility to see when they can finally get wet. "I kept checking to see if it was open," said Sgt. David Thompson, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd COSCOM.

"It's been hot and we've been looking forward to it being opened," said Yulee, who swam with a group of friends.

Responses from the soldiers who have been to the newly opened pool have been very positive about both the facility and the water. Yulee said the cool water was great and that he plans on going for a swim everyday if he can.

"It's a very nice pool and the water is very refreshing," said Thompson, adding that he definitely planned to return to the pool.

The doors are open and the word is spreading. Every day more soldiers come to escape the heat at the LSA Anaconda swimming pool. Something as simple as a hole filled with water is helping raise soldiers' morale and making their time away from home a little more bearable.

DoDDs programs fit deployment

By Ignacio "Iggy" Rubalcava
222nd Base Support Battalion Public Affairs Office

With the onset of the new academic year, administrators and teachers from all four Baumholder schools are focusing on any concerns or problems students may have regarding the current deployment that has separated so many children from at least one family member.

Although this initiative on the part of teachers and administrators was expected and is definitely in the interest of all their students, administrators from all four schools are saying that the numerous programs that DoDDS has had for years or those that have just been initiated are actually tailored to handle almost any issue that may arise as a result of the absence of a family member.

The recently instituted Pupil Teacher Ratio in the earlier grades is helping teachers monitor their classes and detect any issues that may arise, officials said.

"It's an early childhood initiative where the first to third grade classes are at approximately a one to 18 ratio, one teacher for 18 students," said Helen Balilo, assistant principal at Baumholder's Smith Elementary School.

In addition to counseling and the various support services available at each school, two of Baumholder's schools are adding another dimension to give children a better understanding of what their parents are dealing with in Iraq. They are reaching out and setting up correspondence programs with schools in Iraq.

"We're trying to get a better understanding of the situation in Iraq. Our school is involved in the support-a-school program. Chaplain (Maj.) Daniel Wackerhagen has asked us to help support the Airport Village Elementary School in Iraq," said Debbie Brooks, Wetzel Elementary School principal.

"He has several purposes for this program — one being that this program allows the U.S. children and Iraqi children the opportunity to correspond with one another. For example, the first-grade class will probably correspond with the first-grade class in Iraq and they'll be sharing some pictures.

"The second purpose of the program will allow the U.S. children the opportunity, and this is strictly voluntary, to donate any supplies. Right now we're asking kids to come up with things like old pencils or markers. We'll mail the packages back through the rear detachments," said Brooks.

Neubrücke Elementary School is conducting a similar program. "Chaplain (Capt.) Darren Powers, who is deployed in Baghdad, has been in touch with our staff regarding adopting a school over there. We're going to try and set up some sort of an exchange of letters and communication. We just have to find somebody here who can translate Arabic into English. That's a new venture for us. It's a start, and it's something that our kids are excited about and they want to do it," said Wayne Dozark, Neubrücke Elementary School principal.

In the high school it's a slightly different story. Dom Calabria, Baumholder American High School principal, noted. "There's a lot of normal anxiety in the high school where credits start counting for graduation. But we do have a number of new support programs available." The high school has support programs in language arts, reading, geometry and two in algebra that help children who are having problems.

"They're all funded very well by DoDDS which includes real good computer programs. So we have a computer lab set aside just for these labs where every different period a group of kids goes in, kids who need extra support. Each period there's a different subject that goes in there with a group of kids who have been identified as needing extra help.

"That's one of the things that we're instituting for the high school and a couple of middle school classes to support kids that need the extra help," said Calabria.

Another initiative of the high school this year is to separate the high school and middle school children as much as possible. In an indirect way this is also deployment related in that it helps cut down on any undesirable habits that the younger students might pick up from the older students. The younger students are more impressionable than the older ones and without that extra parental influence provided by the deployed mother or father, this could create problems later in the year, officials said.

"Along with that we are also instituting this year separate lunch times for seventh- and eighth-graders and then for high school kids so they should have very little connection during the day," Calabria said.

"There are still some eighth-grade, specifically eighth-grade, but also some seventh-grade kids who, if they are deemed able to take it, are in algebra classes or working in classes with the high school students for credit.

"We also do have a gifted program for seventh- and eighth-graders where they do some high school things, but overall the seventh- and eighth-grades are separate from the high school," said Calabria.

Students are not the only ones affected by the deployment. Several faculty members also have family members deployed to Iraq. "At Smith we have a lot of staff members who are directly affected by family members being deployed," said Balilo.

"Even if our students aren't directly affected, everyone is indirectly affected in the school. So pretty much from the very beginning we've talked with the new staff members and all the teachers about being a little bit more compassionate.

"So we're just trying to create more of a sense of community in the school and supplement some of what's missing at home," said Balilo.

Dozark pointed out that it's a little early for to identify any particular child who seems to be having problems dealing with Dad or Mom being deployed. "We're not seeing anything right now. The kids actually seem to be doing fine, and I'll tell you, they were excited about school opening. The kids were ready. It was an awfully long summer ... so when school opened it became a really exciting time for them, and we made it special," said Dozark.

"I think if there's one thing we got here that keeps kids excited about school is that it's such a fascinating day for them when you stop and think about it. Throughout the day they will have art, music and PE. They will also have host nation and computer classes. They have a gifted education teacher come into their room virtually every other day. They have an opportunity to participate in school activities like our accelerated reader program. We're going to start this week, hopefully, our after school programs where we will have something like 'games unplugged,' no electronic games. We had a big success with that last year," said Dozark.

"Our class loads are perfect," he said. "We have a full staff with several new people. They are dynamite. It's probably the best staff I've ever had in all my years of supervision and being a principal. With that said, there's a lot of care and concern expressed by these teachers. With the smaller number of kids in their class they're able to monitor them very carefully. So we're aware about their needs," he said.

Regardless if they are instituting an outreach program or making effective use of tried and true DoDDS programs, Baumholder schools are ready to step up and help Baumholder make it through the school year and the deployment. But because it's still early in the school year and some issues may not have had time to manifest themselves, Baumholder's teachers and school administrators are keeping a watchful eye on their students. And although all the schools have taken the initiative on the topic of deployment concerns and challenges, it's still early in the school year.

Dozark summed it all up by saying, "I guess you could say we're just monitoring right now."

Bailey makes All-Army, helps win gold

By Ignacio "Iggy" Rubalcava

222nd Base Support Battalion
Public Affairs Office

The dream of many ballplayers is to some day make it to the big leagues. For Baumholder's Robert Bailey that dream became a reality when he was selected for the 2003 All-Army softball team. But his dream didn't end there. Bailey and his 14 Army teammates brought home the gold after competing at the Armed Forces Softball Championship at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

"Last year the Army took the bronze and the year before they won the gold. This year we came back," said Bailey.

"What was neat about it was that all the other forces had veterans — guys who had been there before. They had like nine to 10 veterans on every team. We only had six vets, and we came back to win the gold medal. I was a first year player," said Bailey.

One might falsely conclude that playing softball for the Army is a classic military "boondoggle" that takes you away from your job so you can have some fun and do nothing but play softball all day. Bailey says nothing could be further from the truth because for him it was a real challenge.

"A lot of people think, oh you're just playing softball. You got it easy, but it's not easy. Out of everything I've done in the military that's the hardest thing I've done physically.

"Just like normal units, we were up at six and doing PT. After PT and breakfast we were on the field by 8:30 a.m. We practiced from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. and then we would get two hours off for lunch. At 1:30 p.m. we were back on the field until 4:30 p.m. We'd get an hour and a half off and then we'd play three games at night so we were not done till 10 or 10:30 p.m. We'd grab something to eat, go home, take a shower and we'd be in bed by 11:30 p.m. or midnight and then it would start all over again," said Bailey.

"We'd go six days a week. The only day we had off was Monday to kind of recover. So it was rough," he said.

Of course players had to display a skill and talent for softball before becoming one of the lucky 15 players to bask in this "dream" routine, but the selection process was no cakewalk either.

Victor Rivera, this year's All-Army coach, reviewed about 250 applications before whittling that number down to 24 candidates.

Because of the deployment, the number of candidates was not as high as other years. "Usually the coach gets anywhere from 300 to 500 applications from guys wanting to play. So out of the 250 that applied this year, he selected 24 guys that he thought had the best chance of making the team," said Bailey.

The first two weeks at the All-Army training camp are a great disappointment for nine of the 24 candidates. That's when the coach cuts players and keeps only the 15 players he believes have what it takes to play on the All-Army team.

The 15 players began a rigorous month and a half training before traveling to Florida to represent the Army at the Interservice Softball Championship.

Selection for the All-Army camp involves completing an application that resembles a resume. It asks things such as how many years you've been playing, at what levels have you played, how many home runs have you scored, what's your average?

"On top of it, you usually have to have someone who's made the team before look at you and say, 'Hey, you can go. You can try out,'" said Bailey.

"What they'll do is give your name to the coach and say 'I can vouch for this guy. He can play. Give him a chance,'" he said.

Bailey has tried out in the past but had never made the cut until this year.

"In the past I haven't made it, but I've come close," he said. He was undecided about applying this year when Rivera called.

"I played with him for about three years when he was stationed in Büdingen, so when he called he asked if I was still interested in playing. I said yeah. He said, 'You need to put your application in.' So I said all right. I went down there. I tried out and ended up making the team," said Bailey.

At the armed forces competition Bailey boasted being six for nine. "I was like over .700, which is good for softball. In baseball you can say .300 is good but in softball if you say .300 you're in trouble," he said.

"I did pretty well at the armed forces. I didn't start. I came off the bench. I knew that, but he (Rivera) said 'Hey, there's gonna be a time when I'm gonna call you and I need you to be ready,'" said Bailey.

"As it turned out, we were against the Marine Corps and we were down 11-12 with two outs in the third inning. One of our guys wasn't hitting as well; he was just struggling. I'm sitting on the bench and he looked over and I knew it was coming so I started putting my stuff on. So he says 'Are you ready?' So I got my stuff on and he said 'OK, let's go.' I went up, got a base hit and scored both runs and it put us up.

"That was what was good about our team. I mean, even though we had a lot of rookies, all 15 of us played at one point, unlike the other armed forces teams. A couple of guys from the Air Force didn't even see the field.

"And every time he made a substitution, call it good coaching or whatever you want to call it, everyone came out and did what they had to do and it helped us win.

"He's a good coach. Discipline is a big factor. He doesn't care if you're the Barry Bonds of the softball world. If you show an attitude, you're on the bench. You're going to play within his standards. I think in the past we didn't have that and with him coming in as a new coach, that's what helped us win it," said Bailey.

Bailey now takes his place among the other gold medalists whose individual or team pictures have earned a place of honor at Baumholder's Hall of Champions.

"He doesn't care if you're the Barry Bonds of the softball world. If you show an attitude, you're on the bench."

CFC Overseas kicks off Oct. 1

Combined Federal Campaign-Overseas officials, part of the largest workplace giving campaign in the world, have announced that this year's campaign will run from Oct. 1 through Dec. 10. During the campaign season donors can designate contributions to a variety of deserving American and international U.S.-based charities through the CFC-O.

"The CFC raised $58,849 at Baumholder last year with 18 percent of the population participating," said Bill Badger, this year's CFC project officer.

The official kickoff at Baumholder will be in front of the Post Exchange Oct. 1 at 1:30 p.m. There will be cake donated by the exchange to commemorate the occasion, and CFC information. Everyone is invited to stop by to help kick off this year's campaign.

Unit coordinators will begin contacting their members shortly.

"Last year U.S. military members and federal employees pulled together and generously raised over $11.2 million overseas," said Renee Acosta, president of the campaign management organization for the

CFC-O. "This year we know the tradition of giving will continue."

The CFC's philanthropic commitment is rooted in the many charitable campaigns of the 1960s. Seeing a need to collect all the philanthropic campaigns under one umbrella, federal employees created the CFC — one campaign, once a year. An executive order signed by President John F. Kennedy made the CFC a reality and turned an innovative idea into a uniquely effective way for federal employees to help those in need close by and around the world.

The city of Baumholder continues to show its support for deployed soldiers not only with words but also with its deeds.

The most recent contribution coordinated by Baumholder residents was a truckload of shampoo valued at a whopping € 68,561.82.

The donation included 5,923 bottles donated by Sebastian International, a company specializing in beauty body and hair products.

Contact with Sebastian International was initiated by Ulrich Jung, son of the owner of the barber shop "Friseurteam Jung" in downtown Baumholder.

Christiane Hupfeld, a representative of the beauty and hair product company that made the donation, traveled to Baumholder from Wiesbaden to personally make the presentation to family readiness group coordinators of the Baumholder military community.

FRG coordinators Tina Olsen and Nathalie Carillo accepted the donation on behalf of Baumholder's FRGs.

Also on hand during the presentation were numerous representatives from Pro Baumholder, an organization of local merchants who spearheaded the initial initiative to provide care packages to single soldiers stationed in Iraq.

Some of the donated shampoo was immediately packaged up along with other donated products and prepared for shipment to single soldiers in Iraq. The remainder will be packaged in future shipments.

These care packages include the bare necessities that soldiers may need to make life just a little more pleasant while deployed.

Placement care

Baumholder's Emergency Placement Care, formerly known as Foster Care, is in need of families to provide short-term, 24-hour care for eligible children who cannot be cared for by their natural family or legal guardian.

The Exceptional Family Member Program currently needs potential Emergency Placement Care providers.

Volunteer hours are earned for time spent in training. Once certified as an Emergency Placement Care provider, volunteer hours are awarded for on-call status and for total time spent caring for children.

The Emergency Placement Care Program relies on special people in the community who are willing to invest their time and energy to ensure that our children are well cared for when they are most vulnerable. Participation by volunteers will make a difference in the community. Anyone interested in becoming a provider, or who have questions about the program may call Floyd Davison at mil 485-8188 or civ (06783) 6-8188.
